39 Occupy ICE protesters in San Francisco arrested in camp raid

Sarah Ravani July 9, 2018 Updated: July 9, 2018 1:44 p.m.

A weeklong encampment of activists protesting Immigration Customs and Enforcement and President Trump's zero-tolerance immigration policy came to an end early Monday, when nearly 40 people were arrested overnight in San Francisco.

The group, which goes by the name Occupy ICE SF, had set up camp outside of San Francisco's U.S. Citizenship & Immigration Services offices on Washington and Sansome streets as part of a national protest against the agency, which has come under fire after thousands of migrant children were separated from their parents — some of whom have already been deported.

Zoe Samudzi, a member of the local Occupy ICE chapter, was at home after participating in the protest throughout the week when she received a call from other demonstrators at the scene to come help with "jail support."

"Throughout the week, it seemed as though the police were increasingly looking to remove the encampment from the space," Samudzi said. "The attitude, the comments they were making, body language."

Just after 1 a.m. Monday, Occupy ICE SF tweeted: "The #occupyicesf camp is currently being raided."

Thirty-nine people in total were arrested at about 12:30 a.m. for lodging in public, and 10 of those people were also booked on suspicion of resisting arrest, said Officer Robert Rueca, a San Francisco police spokesman.

Sixteen of the people arrested are San Francisco residents, 15 hail from surrounding Bay Area cities and eight are from outside the Bay Area, Rueca added.

Additionally, the closure of the block caused barriers for oncoming traffic and emergency vehicles, he added.

Demonstrators first arrived at the ICE headquarters in San Francisco on Monday, July 2, when they pitched five tents, a small pavilion and a section of chain-link fence with barbed wire to limit access to the building.

Samudzi said the demeanor of the officers Monday morning was "scary."

"There's something really horrifying about that — that they're willing to shut down and to raid and to dismantle a peaceful protest," Samudzi said.

SFPD arrests 39 Occupy ICE protesters in encampment sweep

By Michael Barba and Ian Williams on July 9, 2018 11:25 am

Dozens of protesters were arrested early Monday morning when San Francisco police raided an encampment of activists calling for the abolition of the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, according to police.

Police cited 39 activists on suspicion of misdemeanor lodging in public during the midnight raid on the encampment outside the ICE offices on Washington Street between Sansome and Battery streets, according to Officer Robert Rueca, a police spokesperson. Ten of the protesters were also arrested for allegedly resisting arrest.

All of the protestors have been released from custody.

Since last Monday, the protesters had blocked a path that immigration authorities use to transport detainees to and from the ICE offices at 630 Sansome St. The encampment grew amid news that the Trump administration detains and separates children from their families at the U.S. and Mexico border.

Rueca said police received "numerous complaints from the community regarding violations of health hazards," including public urination and cooking with open flames. A majority of those arrested were Bay Area residents, with 16 coming from San Francisco and 15 from other Bay Area cities.

"Our City has specific restrictions against sidewalk camping," Rueca said in a statement. "Frequent admonishments had been given to participants at this encampment over the last week and prior to last night's action. But the blockage of the street continued."

Zoe Samudzi, one of the advocates for the abolition of ICE, arrived at the encampment as police cleared it out.

"It was devastating to see all that labor and the community members scattered," said Samudzi. "At the same time, it reinforced our solidarity because it showed the state is really afraid of us. It's reassuring."

The sweep comes just days before Supervisor London Breed is set to be sworn in as mayor. PJ Johnston, a spokesperson for Breed, said the mayor-elect is "monitoring, but we have no comment at this time."

There was hardly a trace of the encampment by 10 a.m. Monday when Josiah Luis Laderete, 48, arrived to participate in the now terminated protest. Laderete had come Thursday with a group of poets. But only faded chalk and sidewalk barricades remained Monday.

"I wanted to keep coming," Laderete said. "It might be the Latino face that people see, but this affects everyone."

"For me, it's a matter of survival," he continued. "That could have been my family."

Both SFPD and the Department of Homeland Security were still present in the area Monday morning.

While everyone else was asleep late Sunday night, San Francisco police dismantled a nearly weeklong encampment to Occupy ICE.

Just after 1 a.m., Occupy ICE SF tweeted that the camp at 630 Sansome St. was being raided and that they needed additional support. In the end, 39 people were arrested for lodging in public, and 10 of those were also cited for resisting arrest, San Francisco police confirmed Monday morning. Everyone was later released.

Police said they received numerous complaints of health hazards, including noise and cooking with open flames. The calmer holiday week meant the encampment blocked less traffic than it ordinarily might have, undoubtedly a factor in that clearing it Sunday night coincided with the return to regular traffic on Monday morning.

Some protesters were harmed, with at least one reported dislocated shoulder or elbow. Police spokesperson Officer Robert Rueca confirmed that two women were sent to the hospital with non-life-threatening injuries but declined to give additional details.

Major action against the local ICE office began at the Families Belong Together march on June 30, when an estimated 30,000 people rallied against the Trump administration's immigration policies. The order to separate children from their parents at the border may have been reversed, but immigrant families have long been split apart by deportations and detentions.

On Monday, July 2, hundreds kept the momentum going by protesting at the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services at 444 Washington St. and blocked its parking lot with a makeshift wall complete with barbed wire. Around 35 people were found holding down the fort by the next morning, intentionally interfering with the agency's work.

"We don't want to interrupt the activities of immigrant families who want to get green cards, or advance their ability to stay in the country," a protester named Michael said.

"But this building is also an ICE facility, and sometimes buses come in with people who've been detained in other parts of California."

Occupy Wall Street blossomed into a movement in 2011 but has been largely dormant since 2015. Its message has been far from lost with tangible offshoots like Rolling Jubilee, Sen. Bernie Sanders' Our Revolution and the rising popularity of the Democratic Socialists of America.

Encampment protesters have vowed to continue the fight with a series of actions this week. A protest at Salesforce began at 10 a.m. Monday to target their aiding of the Border Patrol, and it will resume outside the Grand Hyatt on Thursday from 2:30 p.m. to 6 p.m.

They are also targeting SFPD Police Chief Bill Scott by calling his office during business hours to decry the raid, and demanding that the Board of Supervisors pass a resolution to abolish ICE during their regular meeting on Tuesday.

"Politicians are now paying lip service that ICE needs to be abolished, but we're not going to believe them until they do something concrete, like remove their funding," Michael said. "It's within their power to do that. It's within our power to block a driveway for a while. So that's what we're going to do."

The encampment is just one local flashpoint in the national immigration debate, with politicians facing continuous pressure to protect undocumented immigrants. With the focus on ICE in recent months, San Francisco may have to walk the walk to live up to its sanctuary-city status.
